the many who want to know, who and what is sake of being polite." Hugo Stinnes, the German capitalist who is bulking so largely in Europa just now.

Kuttner.

The great value of the work is that it gives a remarkable survey of the recent developments of German capitalism.

The author tells us that Stinnes is fifty years of age and has the appearance of a workman. "He is like a piece of coal wandering about in cy his own coal mines. His thick head is set upon a stocky trunk. His black hair is cut close, the face is pale and expansive, the beard is black as coal, the nose is curved and the eyes are heavily underlined . . . he walks with a slight stoop and shuffles along like a sailor."

We are further told that he "never stops working," and " has an irrestible impulse to do creative work."

He is one of the "dyed-in-the-wool industrial leaders," who "know nothing of rest, luxury, or enjoyment" and "live and toil in the simplest surroundings."

This is probably true: it is important that the proletarian movement should realise it; for it is such men whom Communism must vanquish. We cannot do that by loafing over billiard tables, or gossiping about each other in club rooms.

Stinnes has made a large fortune. " Even if he could take time for it , he would find it impossible to spend all his wealth and enjoy it." A foreman is said to have asked Stinnes why he still worked so hard; he answered: "For my children." He could not have meant that he was merely working to provide a fortune for his children: he has done 'hat already. No; he is working to establish a position of permanent power, an industrial empire for his descendants. He is not merely working for his lifetime: he is working to maintain and extend the present capitalist conditions in the future: that makes him the more dangerous an opponent. eldest son is a man of the same type and may prove an even greater business genius than his father, says Brinckmeyer.

On the socialisation of industry. Stinnes is said to have been widely consulted: he is quoted as saving:

"As regards the form of colectivism, you wi'l always have to adapt yourself to previous experience. Under ollo circumstances must you under-estimate the importance of the individual."

Legien, the pro-war Amsterdam Second International Trade Union leader, is quoted as saying to Stinnes:

"It is a pity that we did not get to know each er, years ago: in that case, many things in the abour movement and in industry might have turned ut differently."

Legien had already proved himself a soul lost the working class movement by that time. his remark shows clearly enough that he was of the same stuff as J. H. Thomas, J. R. Clynes, nd others of the kind.

Stinnes has purchased a string of newspapers ad also all the plant and factories concerned in roducing them: the paper mills, printing works,

It also produced great Socialist opponents of Capitalism: Marx, Engels, and Bebel, whilst Lassalle, who came from East Germany, reached the height of his carrer in the Rhine district.

Stinnes I.

The grandfather of Hugo Stinnes. Mathias Stinnes, set up in the business of transport for himself, at Muelheim on the Ruhr, in the year 1808, when only 18 years of age. He bought his first coal barge in 1810. Afterwards he bought coal mines in the Rubr, and in 1817 he was opening an important shipping line from Cologne to Rotterdam, with a regular service of nine of his own ships. He was now building ships in his own yards. By 1820 he owned 66 coal barges, plying on the Rhine and Ruhr, and to Bonn, Coblentz, and the Dutch maritime ports. Soon his barges carried also iron, textiles, wine, grain, ores, etc. He was the first to use a steam tug on the Rhine. He called his steamers, regally, Mathias Stinnes I, II, III, and so on. The teamsters who had towed the barges before Mathias introduced his steamers, fired upon the steamers with mortars and small cannon, as a protest against their labour being superseded, but the protest was unavailing.

Mathias Stinnes died in 1845. His business passed first to the eldest son, Mathias, after his death, to the second son, Gustav, and after his death, to the third son, Herman Hugo. None of these men appear to have been remarkable, but Herman Hugo's second son, Hugo, is the present notorious Stinnes, born February 22nd, 1870.

It will be observed that Stinnes did not climb up from the bottom of the ladder: indeed, Brinckmeyer declares that Germany can show no industrial leader of the calibre of a trust magnate who has done so: another proof of the falsity of the adage: "There is plenty of room at the top."

Hugo Stinnes served a commercial apprenticeship in Coblentz, then studied the business of mining, above and below, by practical experience, and afterwards, still only nineteen, he attended a school of mining. He served two years in the firm of Mathias Stinnes Ltd., then started for himself as Hugo Stinnes, Ltd., at the age of 23. He also remained connected with the family mines.

Stinnes, Trust Magnate.

Beginning thus, he soon became one of the main forces in consolidating German industry. His power in this direction since the war has so greatly increased, that people now speak of 'he "Stinnes-isation" of Germany.

Brinckmeyer observes that, before the war, it sounded incredible to Germans that the industry of the United States should be dominated by five men: Rockefeller, Harriman, Morgan, Vanderbilt, and Gould. To-day such a domination no longer seems remarkable to the Germans:

"A dissolution of all established economic orginisations, and the rapid development of absolutely new forms of organisation have taken place in Germany since the war. . . American methods of financing, of pooling of interests, and of combinations, have already been adopted in Germany, and are undergoing further development."

This fact is of great importance: it shows that the Marxian predictions regarding the consolilation of capital are being verified. We may confidently believe that Capitalism is entering its final phases,* prior to the proletarian revolution which shall abolish it and make way for Communism.

Brinckmeyer observes:

"These companies may often be compared to the numerous links of a chain, which are under the control and direction of anyone who has the first link in his hands. The system of preferred shares, with multiple voting power, increases the possibility of exerting influences still more. At the same time, the owners, despite their comparatively small capital investment, have the determining vote in all important decisions of the company. In this way it is easily possible, under certain circumstances, for a small group to dominate affairs at will, without much outlay of capital. These methods are justified at present, on account of the danger of foreign control, due to the exchange situation. But the fact remains that it is always possible for a small group to bring a greater and greater section of industry under its control.

"Anyone who has the influence to put through a scheme of industrial control, can do so on a much arger scale than ever before. And it is open to anyone to misuse this power. Unless Germany is willing to be exposed to contingencies and surprises of a most startling nature, she will soon have to recognise the necessity of investigating and controlling this highly complicated situation."

As we have said, Stinnes is one of the main forces behind these developments. Mining, coal dealing, and water transport are the basis from which he operates. He has many branches in many countries: his ships are on the North Sea, the Baltic, Mediterranean, and Black Sea.

The Rhine-Westphalian Coal Syndicate, formed by his family in 1839, and in which he is the leading figure, now includes practically the entire Ruhr output.

In 1901 he formed the German-Luxemburg Mining and Smelting Company which, in time, absorbed a number of other companies, including the Union Company of Dortmund, and acquired an interest in the Saar-Mosel Mining Company. from which it procured coal for its Differdingen smelting plant. It is thus that he organises the German-Luxemburg Mining and Smelting Company, was also interested in the Rhine-Westphalian Company. The coal mines in this combination produced 5,000,000 tons annually, and 1,300,000 tons of coke were produced each year. Iron ore for the Dortmund works was produced by its own mines on the Ruhr and near the Sieg and Weser rivers, in Nassau and in the Hartz. The combination had a share in the Lorraine mines. It was linked up with factories on the North Sea coast. It-also had mine fields in Upper Frankonia and the Palatinate.

Stinnes, on behalf of the "experts," drew up a memorandum for the committee. This tween two people, which continues to exist after memorandum proposed:

> (1) to trustify industry "vertically," and then to link it up "horizontally" (as we have previously described);

> (2) to create industrial provinces, dividing the economic field, not according to geographical and political relations, but on practical economic lines. Within each district there would be a combination of all branches of industry and a joint regulation of power, raw material, output, and transport.

The scheme of organisation is precisely that towards which Stinnes is striving through his own Trust. He recommended that the Government should organise such co-ordination; but he did not contemplate the abolition of Capitalism: he proposed, as a palliation of present injustices, however, that it isn't at all possible for a person to say he can stick to one love. Feelings are not the holding of shares by employees in the industry.

The de Valera Document which was put forward as an alternative to the Downing Street Treaty does not seem to us to represent a policy marked by tactical ability. It is true that his alternative might avoid the oath of allegiance to King George and the British Government; but it is in most essentials exceedingly like the Treaty.

It contains too many of the Treaty's compromises to meet enthusiastic acceptance in Ire'and.

It seems to us that, to be successful, it was necessary for de Valera to stand firm for the Republic: the force which can be united behind an alternative compromise is not likely to be united and determined enough to fight the original compromise, we believe.

De Valera's tactical moves have suffered from the same infirmity it seems to us: he has been too vacillating, too undecided. Document 2 became Document 3, and he wished Document 2 not to be disclosed-a sign of weakness. He resigned from the Presidency, then stood for eelection, "on the request of his followers," and at the same time signified his intention to retira into private life.

One cannot help feeling that he will bungle the decisive moment to act when the opportunity for action comes.

The W.I.I.U. & the R.T.U.I.

SERIOUS ALLEGATION BY NAT WATKINS. The allegations made by Nat Watkins, Secretary of the British Bureau of the Red Trade Union International, are so seriously scurrilous that we should hesitate to insert his letter, with out making direct inquiries in Moscow, were it not that, in his official capacity, Watkins To the Editor of the Workers' Dreadnought: is probably repeating the allegations elsewhere, DEAR COMRADE,and it is but fair that the opportunity for an answer to them should be given. Moreover, it will probably take some time to get a reply from

The reply of W. Barr seems to be conclusive, as had the Watkins version been correct, we do not think the delegate in question would nave been allowed to attend the R.T.U.I. Congress in any capacity, nor do we think he would have returned in company with other reputable delegates, and on good terms with them, as we happen to know he did.

Moscow.

We are sending the correspondence to Moscow.

To the Editor of the Workers' Dreadnought:

DEAR COMRADE,-In your review column of the issue of November 26, I notice that the W.I.I.U. delegate to the First Congress of the Red International of Labour Unions has published his report in pamphlet form, and submitted the same to be reviewed and commented upon through the columns of your valuable paper.

The choice morsels selected and commented upon are not only incorrect but intentionally misleading.

Comrade B., the accredited delegate of this organisation called the Workers' International Industrial Union, which is neither International nor Industrial, and its revolutionary activities are strictly confined to the flippant use of revolutionary phrases, whilst the demonstrative side of the organisational work is have "black-legged." counter-revolutionary and reactionary, some of its We are well aware of the supposed incident of have undertaken blacklegging and "scab" work. dustrial Unionism!

(What revolutionaries, eh!) report of his organisation, the credentials specifying take the floor, and that I lie when I state the reaccordance with the report, with no power to deviate from the beaten track of W.I.I. Unionism.

In his report, Comrade B. states that neither he nor the American delegate were allowed to speak; this is a falsehood.

Comrade B., being included in the minority section of the British delegation, was entitled to address the Congress upon every Thesis presented, having fifteen minutes to state his case, with an additional fifteen minutes to reply. This comrade, during the sessions, which occupied the first five days, made no application for the floor; only on one occasion was his name sent forward, this time, to speak upon the question of "working within the Trade Union movement." Over sixty speakers asked for the floor upon this important question, and all speakers were cailed to speak in the order their names were sent in. After thirty speeches were delivered, a resolution was adopted to close the debate, and the delegate of this organisation, and thirty others, were cut out, it being considered inadvisable to continue the debate, as repetition was prevalent to a very large degree.

With reference to the American delegate of this organisation, the activities of this comrade in the past were so questionable, that the International credential committee referred his case to an investigation committee, before whom certain charges were placed, one of which I will quote. A typewritten statement put forward by W. Haywood late General Secretary of the I.W.W. in America, stating that this delegate's integrity could not be vouched for by the American delegation, for this reason: "During the trial of 119 members of the I.W.W. in Chicago, this man sat side by side with the prosecuting counsel, exchanging notes and indulging in frequent conversations; he was also instrumental in procuring for the prosecution the necessary pamphlets required to prove the case against them; this conduct continued for ten weeks. After the sentence was pronounced he published in their weekly paper an article stating that these violent revolutionaries were justly punished." As diverse as the American Delegation were upon our promise. the question of "tactics" and view-points generally, they were unanimous in protesting against the admission of this delegate into delegatory sessions or Another amusing passage commented upon in your review is, "that the delegate from the American Federation of Labour had no mandate, neither was he a representative from that body."

Being elected to the International Credential Committee, I am in a position to state that no comrade claimed to represent that body, but several delegates were supplied with genuine credentials from some craft unions that were affiliated to the A.F.L.

Yours fraternally, Nat. Watkins. (Secretary, British Bureau, Red International of Labour Unions.)

With reference to the letter sent to you by N. Watkins, Nat. Sec. B.B.R.T.U.I.. In the first place, we should like to point out that Watkins is mistaken when he says that we submitted our report for review. You will recollect that we craved no such favour, being anxious only that you should have a correct rendition of the congress, differing essentially from the reports of the self-appointed representatives" of the B.B.R.T.U.I.

Mr. Watkins claims that we are not an industrial ganisation, nor are we an international one.

We should like to point out that the basis of our organisation is industrial, that is, that we organise according to industry, the smallest unit being known as "plant groups," which, in turn, along with the recruiting locals, carry on the work in the different

And we are not international? The last time Watkins was in Edinburgh, whilst in conversation with myself and another two comrades of the W.I.I.U. he asserted that the delegate of the American W.I.I.U., while in Moscow, wanted the floor to advertise the W.I.I.U. constitution (which, of course, Watkins did not want advertised-it being much too sound for him). Which goes to prove that we are international, whilst, if we inform him that the Australian W.I.I.U. is well-known, he ought to be satisfied; at least, should he not be, we are convinced that any sensible person would admit that we re entitled to call ourselves international.

He tells a feeble story of W.I.I.U. officials, during the coal strike, refusing to hand in their notices, and he goes on to say that, had they dared, they would

The facts of the case are, Comrade Editor, as set forth in our report. The Congress business was arranged in such a way that there was a large amount of routine business to be gone through, and our organisation not being affiliated to the R.T.U.I., we had no moral right to participate in that business. though had we been fond of hearing ourselves talk, we should certainly have applied for the floor. However, the fact remains, that when we did apply for the floor, on the question of tactics—a question which Watkins admits was important-we were den'ed

In support of this claim, we can call on the evidence of Comrade J. Clunie, of the British S.L.P., Comrades J. D. Geonke, A. Smilansky and Anna Sponn, of the American S.L.P., Comrade Coum, of the W.I.I.U. of America, and lastly, if he tells the truth. Harry Pollitt, who conveyed my request for the continue as before. floor to the presidium in person, and when it was denied, conveyed my protest back again with the request that reason be given for the action. Should this not be considered valid proof, we would request anyone, who would like further proof, to write to any of the above comrades, whose addresses

There are, of course, a large number of points in Street, Covent Garden, will merge their identity our friend's letter which are so puerile, that they in the Labour Party. Presently the Commun are beneath contempt, and it is not worth while taking up space replying to them.

He talks about the American W.I.I.U. delegate being under suspicion. We should like to point out that the baseless charges levelled against our American comrade by the intriguers (apparently admired so much by Watkins) were so weak and stupid that our comrade was honourably released and . sked to say nothing about what was called by Losovsky 'this unfortunate and regrettable incident." This he agreed to, and asked us to do the same, which we

Therefore, in the interests of Russia, and not pecause we have anything to hide, we are sticking by

However, it is worthy of note that Watkins making these allegations after the charges levelled against our comrade were proven to be false, a fact which he is bound to be aware of.

Of course, he is careful not to say anything about his friend J. T. Murphy, who was found, while under examination (according to all reports in Moscow), to have been in the pay of Scotland Yard, and censured

No. Comrade Editor, these mushroom "revolutionaries" like to play with phrases, such as "counterrevolutionaries," etc. We should like to point out that we were propagating the principles of Socialism International.

And we are confident that we will continue to on with our work of organising the workers in ally, from the bottom up, long after these pseud Socialists are forgotten.

Should this not be sufficient for Mr. Watkins can go further, as we did not go to Moscow with our eyes and ears shut, and without keeping our eve on those whose whole existence is built upon intrigue With our best wishes for the success

AMERICA v. JAPAN.

We have stated from time to time, that although America and Japan are rivals in the Far East, they might, under certain conditions, unite against Britain, which is also their rival. We have also the treacherous wind of the reformist pointed out that they are always ready to unite for the exploitation of Soviet Russia or China, if their own capitalist interests may be best served thereby. The comments from a leading article in the wellinformed journal, the New York Freeman, are of more than passing interest:

If one has the will for it, one may perhaps believe that the politicians of Japan have been so naive as to exchange the Anglo-Japanese Alliance for a four-Power agreement that promises nothing more than a certain amount of polite conversation, in case reedom" of the "great" German Ite. trouble should arise. On the other hand, one may prefer to think that the Anglo-Japanese Alliance will continue to exist, in actuality if not in form, as long as the interests which created it endure; and one may choose to believe also that the new agreement binds the United States to come to the help of Japan in case her insular territory is attacked. In support of this last notion, we lift from Senator Reed's speech on the four-Power treaty two quotations which he has offered for examination, the one in the bright illumination of the other .. The first extract is taken from one of the Grey-Cambon letters which gave substance to the entente cordiale. 'I agree," wrote Sir Edward Grey, 'that if either Government had grave reason to expect an unprovoked attack by a third Power, or something that threatened the general peace, it should immediately discuss with the other whether both Governments should act together to prevent aggression and preserve peace, and, if so, what measures they would be prepared to take in "The second exhibit is drawn from Article II of the new treaty, according to which the signatory Powers agree that if their rights in relation to their insular possessions in the Pacific Ocean are threatened. be taken, jointly and separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.' "Of course, some of our friends will say that, in Tommy Clarke made a peech on "Fat," and every ship might dictate the co-operation of a common day we play in London. That will be a great day! policy in China and Siberia. Mutual forbearance a great day! here, with the vigorous advancement of financial imperialism by our own international bankers, and of The international repudiation of all war velop that amount of opposition which is necessary to nought office. See list on back page. give the new treaty any real significance. Thus it seems to us that the treaty either leaves the United States and Japan exactly where they were before, with Great Britain as the natural ally of Japan, or else it stands simply as the outward visible sign of a secret or tacit understanding which will make Japan and the United States partners in the exploitation China and Siberia. If any of our readers can discover, in the theory and practice of diplomacy ernationly securing the eight-hour' work- any basis for a less melancholy interpretation of the treaty, we shall be pleased to cut short our speech,

PROLETARIAN SCHOOLS. By Tom Anderson.

On New Year's night we introduced a new play, elper in impressing upon the proletariat that "Haw-Milton Palace." This is a pure, working class play, and deals with the renovation of Haw-Milton

His Grace, the Duke of Haw-Milton, decides to entirely reconstruct the palace, at a cost of nearly £10,000,000, to please her Ladyship, the Duchess, who has taken a fancy to keep a few fleas, bugs, International is to awaken the "German beetles, squirrels, ants, pet monkeys, etc., for fear

They go over they are working 15 hours a day for the every Labour paper, past and present, and the to the Entente, and five hours extra for the ... sallies of Mr. Tomass-were very rich, whilst Mr. Russia. As the Second International-like Tilet in his quaint humorous way, brought down the

The letters of the foremen applying for the job were amusing; each of the foremen represented a political character: Mr. Climes, Mr. Hilley, Mr. Wully, Mr. Manny, Mr. Browning, and Mr. Thornie. Mr. Climes (joiner) was very amusing; he said he had been a foreman joiner for 20 years with Dirty Davy and Sons, Limited, and he was "it." He did not care for any Trade Union; he was a forem in, to-day, to-morrow, and the day after, and a foreman

Mr. Hilley (mason) said: "There had never been a strike of masons in Scotland, as the officials would

Mr. Wully (plasterer) said: "He was a member of the P.L.I. at the request of Mr. MackMoses." The audience velled at this.

He also added that he was a firm believer in the New Testament, and a Nation could only be saved by "being born again" and "washed in the blood of

This statement brought forth a great round of applause, showing you that we are still very religious, we people of the North. Mr. Manny (painter) said that painters did not trouble themselves about Trade Union matters, it was the jobs they had worked at, the "slaveys" they had "walked out" and the feeds they had, was all their concern; he also added that they were very particular about having white jackets, aprons and overalls.

Mr. Browningg (plumber) said that plumbers were social animals, and that a funny story would keep a group of plumbers contented for their natural lives. etc. (Roars of laughter.)

Mr. Thornie (bricklayer) brought down the house with his £30 per week for writing articles on the Labour question; he said 'hese articles were "the best dope ever invented," etc.

Bridget and Mollie, the two maids of the palace, were funny. Mollie says to Bridget: "Will they have drink at the 'pay-off'"? Bridget answers: "Surely to Christ you are no silly: how could they have a ' pay-off' without drink?" (Scots style).

The audience nearly fell off their seats at this, and it was on a Sunday night (foreign papers please John S. Clarke said he was a "dud" reader, and

IRISH MINERS TAKE MINES.

The Dublin Voice of Labour says :-

"All power to the Soviets! The miners here [Ballingarry], whose patience is exhausted waiting for the much-lauded mining company to come to their relief, have bravely taken into their own hands the working of some of the local mines. All power to them! They are the first of the boys of sweet Slievardagh to do the proper thing-namely, to keep themselves and their wives and children from dying with hunger and vant when the way and the means were at their hands. Those fine Irishmen are miners who can work, and are willing to work, still work is denied them. What are they to do? If the bloated capitalist were to answer, he would tell them, 'Wait until the Free State would function, and then there will be plenty of work for all in the mines and factories.' But the bloated, idle parasite, while giving such an answer, would not feel any want of anything himself. Go on, brave workers of the Commons and Ballingarry, work the mine. What the Lord put at your feet for your benefit, stoop down and pick it up. Allow no enemy to stop you without knowing the reason

IF WALES WENT RED.

South Wales Labour representatives on local governing bodies recently held a conference and threatened a refusal to continue administration; a threat which they are able to make, because, in many cases, they hold the majority of seats. The threat has gone up in the air, like a soap bubble, and apparently has left no more behind it.

The other day the Merthyr Borough Council Watch Committee had a long discussion regarding the granting of 'bus licences to by for hire on the public roads. The Merthyr Councillors appear to have some hing of the martinet about them: they are particular as to adherence to time tables; they object to the 'bus H.B. 1728 being substituted for 'bus H.B. 698, "owing to an alleged break-down"; in short, they insist that 'bus proprietors must "keep faith with the Council. Moreover, they complain that there are 'daily complaints from one 'bus proprietor regarding another, and pandemonium on the public stands." Such behaviour is shocking to the city fathers. They have refused several 'bus licences and limited others to the carrying of workmen.

The Ministry of Transport has protested: it is sorry for the little 'bus proprietors, in spite of their deficiencies, for the public obliged to walk, and, perhaps, for the mineowners, whose workmen may arrive after time. The Town Clerk of the democratic Council of Merthyr has, bowever, replied that the Ministry of Transport has no jurisdiction in this matter.

A trivial little controversy: how different things might be if South Wales were really Red! Suppose Merthyr should refuse all the 'bus licenses and run its own 'buses. Probably it intends to do that presently, since it is grantingonly short licenses. Suppose, however, all the South Wales Councils should terminate all the 'bus and tram licenses, and run its own services. "That could not legally be done."

Of course not; but if South Wales were Red, it would not hesitate on that account. It would not stop at cutting out private enterprise in 'buses and trams. It would make itself responsible for supplying the people with clothes and food. It would make itself responsible for the working of the mines and for the railway transport within its borders. It would summon the workers in each industrial concern and on every farm, to form their Soviets. It would call on all the Soviets, which would thus arise, to link themselves up in a net-work covering the area. It would halt the trains arriving at the Welsh borders, and call on the workers engaged on those trains to show solidarity with Red Wales. It would do the same with the sailors on the ships touching the coast of Wales.

It would issue an appeal to the workers throughout the British Isles to follow suit.

Wales is not Red; but if it were it would hoist the Red Flag and establish the Soviets within its borders.

"Red Wales would be crushed; its food supply would be cut off; the miners would starve in their valleys; the Government troops would mow them down; cannon and aeroplanes would bring destruction upon their villages."

Red Wales might be crushed as thoroughly as was the Irish Republic of Easter Week, 1916; but it would light a fire in Britain that could never be extinguished.

South Wales is not yet Red; the work of making, training and organising the Reds has not yet been done. The working class of South Wales has produced a plentiful crop of orators, tub-thumpers, and spell-binders, candidates for official positions, Trade Union officials and Labour representatives, and a rank and file that can brag about what South Wales can do; but the work of making and training the evolutionaries of action has not been done.

South Wales proletarians have talked a great deal about organisation; but they have not yet begun to build a revolutionary organisation, or even to think with serious infent in terms of action.

The German miners have their revolutionary Workers' Union linked up with the workers in other industries, and 'heir revolutionary Communist Workers' Party. They have fought for possession of the mines and have been victorious in the fight, so that, though they failed, because the rest of Germany was unready, they could not be disarmed, and were amnestied against punishment.
